

July 10, 2006

To Whom This May Concern,

As you no doubt know, those of us who were living here in south Florida last year experienced the awful destruction and devastation of Hurricane Wilma. Of course, a major part of the property damage that so many here incurred dealt with roofing repair or replacement.

As a south Florida resident for more than ten years and a teacher by profession, I needed to find immediate help in order to deal with the damage done to my house, and of course the major part of that involved my tiled roof.

After interviewing several contractors, I decided to go with Roofing Analytics, LLC. My decision was easy. First, they have an impressive resume involving hundreds of satisfied customers. Next, they displayed complete expertise and professionalism regarding the many questions I posed them. And finally, I choose to contract with Roofing Analytics because I felt these guys really cared about my situation, and thus I instinctively knew I could trust them.

Therefore, it is with pleasure and confidence that I recommend Roofing Analytics! These guys were there from the start, whether it entailed their frequent visits or phone calls – I never felt I was out there alone without their support. The men I dealt with, Brad, Wesley, and Robert, were always courteous, informative, straight, and most importantly, accessible. Throughout the entire process these guys bent over backwards to make sure my insurance company claim went through to my satisfaction, the roofing job go done in a timely and expert manner, and any and all of my concerns as a homeowner were addressed.

In a word, choosing Roofing Analytics proved to be one of the best decisions I have made since buying this terrific house I live in! I am certain you will agree with my assessment once you invite them to bid and ultimately work on your roofing concerns.

Sincerely,
Robert Feldman
Delray Beach, Florida